BINGHAM'S TRAGEDY.

How and Where James Osborne Met His Death.

THE CONFLICTING TESTIMONY.

The Skull on Exhibition—The Prosecution Closes and the Defense Opens—To the Jury To-day.

The jury in the case against Bond and Taylor, charged with the murder of James Osborne, were promptly seated in the box yesterday morning, and proceedings commenced by Assistant District Attorney Clark stating the case as the prosecution expected to prove it. He said that on the 3d of July last, a man named William Taylor lived in Upper Bingham; that this man was the father of John Taylor, one of the defendants; that on the night of the 3d several men congregated there, drank beer and had a good time generally; that Osborne, the deceased, was among the crowd, and that between 10 and 11 p.m., Osborne, through some means or other, got hold of a knife, which old man Taylor demanded of him, and which Osborne refused to give up. The affair finally resulted in a struggle, when both fell; Osborne, however, soon got up, and was backing down the canyon towards Bingham, when the two defendants came out and demanded that Osborne give the knife up; Osborne refused, and still kept backing down the canyon; John Taylor went to a man named Magee and tried to borrow a gun, but Magee refused to let him have it, saying he would not "let his own father have a gun." Taylor then went into his father's house and brought out a club, with which he struck Osborne a heavy blow on the head, felling him to the earth. He lingered until the morning of the 4th, when he died, and a post mortem examination showed that the death resulted from this blow.

DR. J. S. RICHARDS

was the first one called: Am a practicing physician, and have been so since 1875; in July last—the 11th—I went to Bingham and held a post mortem examination on the body of one James Osborne; the body had been buried several days, and was in an advanced state of decomposition; one would hardly have recognized it as being that of a human being; I did not go further than to make an examination of the head and brain; the skull was fractured.

A large portion of the skull of the murdered man was here introduced in evidence, showing where the fracture had taken place.

Continuing, the witness said it was impossible for him to say with what kind of a weapon the fracture was caused; it might have been made with a club, and it would have taken considerable force to have made it; such a fracture might not always produce death, but the chances were very much in favor of it. There was no question but that the wound was caused by a blunt instrument; there was no laceration of the scalp.

TO MR. DICKSON,

he said the skull now exhibited was thinner than the average human skull; there was no depression upon the brain save that caused by hemorrhage.

JOHN BRUNTON, justice of the peace of Bingham precinct, held an inquest on the body of James Osborne on the 4th of July—at Taylor's cabin; Sheriff Burr, John Batters, Dr. Richards and myself were present at the time the body was examined.

To Mr. Dickson—I am satisfied the body examined was that of James Osborne; I recognized it because of several marks that I had noticed on the body before it was buried; Dr. Lindsey made an examination on the day of the inquest; the first time I saw the body was on the 4th of July, in Taylor's cabin.

CHARLES A. KENEST, live in Upper Bingham; am a machinist by trade; on the 3d of July last, between 10 and 11 o'clock, I was sitting on my porch about 300 feet north of Taylor's cabin, when I heard singing and afterwards wrangling; I heard William Taylor asking Osborne for a knife; but the latter refused to give it up, and in a few seconds they clinched and fell; Taylor was pulled off of Osborne and taken into the house; Osborne was backing down the canyon, and Taylor soon passed me with a club in his hand. He said: "I'll fix him now." When he reached Osborne he said: "Osborne, did you strike father with that knife?" Osborne replied: "No, I struck him with my left hand." Taylor then struck the deceased with the club and he fell, and Bond picked up some rocks and attempted to strike Osborne. The trouble was then stopped, and Osborne asked for a drink of water, which was given him, and when an effort was made to wash his head, he cried out with pain and asked to be killed at once. The club used by Taylor was about three feet in length, and the defendant used both hands to inflict the blow. I did not see Osborne make any effort to use the knife; Osborne was about 225 feet from Taylor's cabin when the blow was inflicted; after the trouble was taken Osborne into Case's lot; at that time there were six or seven persons present—Bond, Taylor, Doney, Biers, Harrington, his partner and myself; the latter two, I believe, are now in Colorado; Osborne died the following day, sometime in the morning, in Taylor's cabin; I was present at the coroner's inquest.

To Mr. Dickson—I am an American; have lived in Bingham ten years; knew Osborne only slightly; do not know whether James Osborne was his true name or not; I did not hear Osborne make any threats when the knife was demanded of him—he merely said he would die before he would give it up; I did not see old man Taylor after he had been picked up and carried away from Osborne; I was watching Osborne more closely than anybody else, because I had an idea that something might happen; was about fifteen feet west of the man when Osborne struck William Taylor. Bond was seven or eight feet away; John Taylor, the defendant, was near the cabin; did not hear anyone call or sing out that "Osborne has stabbed Taylor," or "Taylor is stabbed;" there was considerable excitement going on at the time; I had not been drinking that day; I am sure it was Taylor who asked Magee for a gun; I did not believe at the time that Osborne was fatally injured.

Re-direct—It was a bright moonlight night when the tragedy took place; Wm. Taylor is a heavy-built man, and Osborne considerably smaller. The testimony taken at the inquest was not so shoddy. Osborne was about 28 years of age and William Taylor, I suppose, was in his fifties.

At this point a recess was taken until 2 p. m.

IN THE AFTERNOON,

Mr. Ernest was recalled by the prosecution. He testified that on the day following the tragedy he saw a Mr. Hickman there; he drew his attention to a clot of blood at the point Osborne fell when Taylor struck him; he also saw blood in Case's lot, where they took him after he had been struck.

knew Osborne; was with him at Taylor's cabin on the afternoon and night of the 3d; we went there together, and until the morning of the 4th; between 10 and 11 o'clock, a racket started outside; I went out, and as I did so, I saw a couple of men bringing William Taylor into the cabin; there were several men down the road, and I saw Osborne backing down the canyon; I went back to the cabin and met John Taylor coming toward the crowd; he had his hand behind his back, and a few seconds later, I heard a blow; at that time, I must have been sixty or seventy-five feet away from the crowd; I then went to them, and found Osborne lying on the ground on his hands and knees; we examined his head and discovered a bruise; they ostentatiously held with water, and did all they could for him; I asked Bond and Taylor what we should do with him, and finally Taylor went and asked his father if he would consent to the wounded man coming in; so far, as I know, he did not speak after he had been hit with the club. He was unconscious in the morning when we got up, and died somewhere about 11 a. m.

To Mr. Dickson—Osborne, the deceased, told me about two weeks before the homicide, that his real name was Joseph Stokess; I did not hear Bond threaten to injure Osborne in any way; John Taylor, Philip Bond, William Taylor and myself carried Osborne into the cabin; we did not know how badly injured he was at that time, so we did not send for a doctor; no blood came from the wound; the face was dirty and scratched.

Re-direct—I cannot say that Osborne was drunk; he had been drinking a little, however.

was in his house between 9 and 10 o'clock, on the 3d, when he heard some singing, and then a wrangle; heard someone say, "Give up that knife!" and the reply was, "I won't do it." I went out; saw a man go into Taylor's cabin and then come out again; John Taylor soon came there with a club, and after a few seconds' conversation with Osborne, struck him with a club; Osborne reeled and fell; Taylor passed close to me just before he struck Osborne, with a club in his hands; behind him, it was a bright moonlight night; I did not know any of the men engaged in the fight—they were all strangers to me.

To Mr. Dickson—I did not see anybody strike at Osborne as he was lying on the ground; saw blood on the face of old man Taylor; as he was being led into the cabin; did not see Bond with any rocks in his hand; I did not testify before the grand jury that the club was five inches thick.

W. D. HICKMAN

was a deputy United States Marshal. A subpoena was placed in my hands for Jack Harrington and Dennis Ragerty, but I learned that they were in Colorado. Saw some blood on the face of Taylor's cabin—some about seventy-five yards away, and more about fifty or sixty feet away, in Casey's lot.

To Mr. Dickson—Yes, the pools of blood I saw might have come from a man's nose—they might have come from a rabbit, so far as I know.

At this point the prosecution rested, and

WHERE WE STAND.

The Chamber of Commerce Appeals to the Citizens.

A FEW FACTS AND FIGURES.

"There is a Tide, Which Taken at the Flood, Leads on to Fortune."

The funds in the treasury of our Chamber of Commerce are exhausted, the $5,000 contributed by its members as an initiation fee have been expended by the board of directors. Whether profitably—let those of our citizens testify who own a foot of ground in this city; whether advantageously, let our real estate, hotel, restaurant, livery stable men, and our business men in general testify. Whether it has been the means of bringing more peace to our city and cultivating better feelings among its citizens, let the community at large testify.

But the work so splendidly begun, is as yet in its infancy.

The time has come when the citizens at large of the community will be asked to prove their faith in the work undertaken by the handful of men composing the Chamber. Much has been accomplished, but much more work is ahead of us.

It cannot be the desire of the community that the 200 men composing the Chamber of Commerce shall forever carry the expense which is bringing material benefits and profits to 30,000 people in this city. Many of these members are men of slender means who have given their mite when they could not possibly have anticipated that the result would be such as the Chamber has been able to achieve.

To accomplish what is yet before us, there is firstly needed money; secondly, much money, and thirdly, a great deal of money. The money must come from the community at large, each member thereof contributing liberally in proportion to his means. We must consider ourselves one great business house which is going to advertise its wares—and what business-man now doubts the efficacy of advertising?

For the purpose of raising these funds, the board of directors of the Chamber of Commerce has nominated a committee of five of its members, whose duty it is to canvass every part of this city, soliciting contributions, and this committee has agreed to do its work faithfully and cheerfully.

When these members call upon you, let no one deem himself too poor to contribute his mite; nor let anyone deem himself too rich to contribute his check for a goodly sum, because he may be able to assume an independent position. Let us take our example from the citizens of Omaha, Denver, and Kansas City, who, through their liberality, made these cities what they are to-day.

Every dollar now contributed by a people will come back to them a hundred fold, and we might say a thousand fold and back our assertion by a very simple calculation of figures. The value of real estate in this city has during the past year increased $5,000,000. The Chamber, in the mean time, has expended $5,000 towards bringing about this result, proving thus exactly a tax of 1 mill, or a thousand fold return for every dollar expended; and also proving beyond a doubt the cheapest and most successful piece of advertising ever accomplished by an individual or a community.

Every person in his life has two or three opportunities to make himself prosperous and independent, if he but grasp the chances. Every community has two or three opportunities to make itself a city and a center, if its citizens are but sufficiently wide awake. Do not allow our golden opportunity to pass! We have active, energetic and zealous neighbors who work and vie with us to come out ahead in this race for growth and for prosperity. Salt Lake City must come out ahead. It must be placed where it belongs, by virtue of its birthright; it must be placed where it belongs, by virtue of its location and its natural facilities. And finally, it must be placed where it belongs, by virtue of the intelligence and energy of its citizens, by virtue of its wealth and the ability of its citizens to make it take a foremost rank among the great inland cities of this continent.

But to accomplish this money is required.

Untie your purse strings and give liberally. When the committee calls upon you, give cheerfully and encourage them in their work. The task the committee has undertaken is no easy one. The salary is somewhat less than that of the President of the United States. Their work is a work of love and public spirit, and their compensation is to be able to assist to make this city what it ought to be and share in its general prosperity.

THE REAL ESTATE MEN

The usual weekly meeting of the City Council convened last evening. The Council Chamber had undergone a thorough renovating, and was as clean as a new pin. The desks and chairs used by the members of the Legislative Council have been retained, in lieu of the old-timers that have so long been used, and the latter have been relegated to the attic. The effect of all of which is that the Council Chamber has taken on a modern air that speaks of progress.

A Quacking Duck.

To the Editor of THE HERALD:

I read an article in a newspaper which gave an account of two bright-eyed, New Jersey women that invested $50 in poultry; the first year they made $1,000; the second year they made $3,000. The girls are foolish for staying in New Jersey. They should come to Utah and invest their cash in ducks. The first canvass back they should secure would be the duck who reported the Sunday services on the 11th inst. for your morning contemporary. With care they might fatten the critter, and with a liberal supply of cat fish, the brain might be changed and enlarged, so as to admit a little sense. The public may rest assured of one thing, that the duck that quacks so much about fairy scenes and leg shows, carries the influence created by the Adamless Eden. It is difficult for doorkeepers and ushers to prevent some local ducks from breaking into the Adamless Eden fairy and leg shows. If however, the investment in the local duck should prove a bad one, a million might be made by selling the critter to Barnum for an unnatural curiosity.
